Heat transfer physics describes the kinetics of energy storage, transport, and energy transformation by principal energy carriers: phonons (lattice vibration waves), electrons, fluid particles, and photons. Heat is energy stored in temperature-dependent motion of particles including electrons, atomic nuclei, individual atoms, and molecules. Heat is transferred to and from matter by the ...

A heat exchanger is a device used to transfer heat between two or more fluids. In other words, heat exchangers are used in both cooling and heating processes. The fluids may be separated by a solid wall to prevent mixing or they may be in direct contact. They are widely used in space heating, refrigeration, air conditioning, power stations, chemical plants, petrochemical plants, petroleum ...

Since resistance due to the wall and fouling is considerable lower than that imposed by the liquid films, and of these, the film heat transfer coefficient of the condensing steam is much higher than the other one, the controlling resistance in this system is that imposed by the inner liquid film.

On top of that, hydronic heating is an art and science unto itself, with things like  $\Delta T$ , GPM, BTU/hr, and R-value calculations involved. If you can get through all that, you're faced with boilers that start at \$2000, a complicated selection of parts that nobody except the experts really understands (you won't be getting advice at Home Depot on building one of these systems), and all sorts ...
